

Bespoke jewelry, made once

One piece. One person. Never repeated.

House of Jiro creates bespoke jewelry for true lovers of the craft — people in search of a one-of-one piece, and an experience equal to none. Every commission begins with a sit-down: a real look into your ideas, your story, your personality, followed by an in-depth design session where no detail goes unexamined.

Materials

Precious metals and natural diamonds — nothing plated, nothing synthetic. Built to last as generational pieces, not just for a season.

Process

Each piece is designed, refined, and finished by hand, in small batches rather than mass production runs.

Commissions

Personal jewelry sets and family sets built to become heirlooms — high-detail, high-quality, timeless designs meant to be passed down.

About the House

House of Jiro is an independent jewelry business based in Ontario, Canada. It's a small operation by design — every piece that goes out has been looked at, considered, and finished personally rather than handed off down a line.

The name carries a simple idea: jewelry should be built the way you'd build something meant to last — with patience, not shortcuts.

Whether you're looking for a finished piece or want to start a conversation about a custom one, inquiries are always welcome.

Let's talk about a piece.
